173838 Smith Gentleman John - 15 April 1902 Christ Church Burial Ground, Newcastle
NMH

Right in the corner of the church yard near the entrance gate, there is a substantial but time worn tomb, in which were buried several members of the Smith family. The head of the house who was familiarly called Gentleman Smith, was quite a character in his way, and for years resided in a house at the corner of King and Pacific Streets, which is now occupied by Mr. McFarlane. He was in many respects a quaint personage and for years kept his coffin in a room and the back of the dwelling. The coffin was made of polished cedar but the lid which was a beautiful piece of timber was stolen by a man working about the place, and converted into other uses. Another eccentricity was the old mans habit of hiding money in odd corners. One day an old servant was rummaging about in the cellar, when he discovered quite a large sum in guineas which had been planted there for years. Smith built the Naval Brigade HOtel and the white buildings which stand on the south side of King Street facing his residence. Many years ago he is reputed to have worked the old coal shaft upon which the bowling green in the big Reserve is situated. He died a wealthy man leaving large property interests in the city

173927 Smith Gentleman John - 28 May 1932 Salt Ash NMH

174106 Smith Gentleman John - 13 March 1897 Newcastle NMH

A resident of Newcastle unearthed a valuable book relating to early convict days in Newcastle containing original depositions of the cases heard at the Newcastle Police Office in the year 1829. Richard Bannister, disobedience of orders; and Mr. John Smith deposed as follows: The prisoner is my assigned servant, stationed at my farm at Wallis Plains. He demanded a pass from my son on the plea of attending the hospital, he having a scalded foot. He was refused the pass but he went away to Newcastle 18 miles distant. Dr. Brooks the colonial surgeon said the man had no just cause to leave the farm for the hospital, as the injuries to his foot were not at all serious. Sentence 75 lashes
